

We are now one year into a new administration, and while many policy priorities are beginning to take shape, significant questions remain about how proposed changes will ultimately impact energy development—especially at the state level here in Pennsylvania. Decisions made in Harrisburg will play a critical role in shaping how our industry operates, invests, and grows.

In this environment, it is more important than ever for Pennsylvania’s oil and natural gas industry to stand together with a unified voice. PIOGA and its members are working collectively to educate policymakers, engage stakeholders, and advocate for practical, science-based policies that recognize the essential role our industry plays in energy reliability, affordability, and economic strength across the Commonwealth.

As energy demand continues to grow—driven by electrification, artificial intelligence, and data centers requiring constant, dependable power—our industry must be at the table, ensuring decision-makers understand the real-world impacts of policy choices. This moment calls for collaboration, education, and active participation from every corner of the industry.
